Energy Infrastructure Beckons Investments: 360° Perspective

The global economy is climbing back from the cliff of 2008, and energy is part of its resilience. The US approaches the status of a net energy exporter as production surges. Do investors see opportunity amidst soft energy prices? Are regulators finding the right balance between growing US energy demand and serving other demand centers like Asia? This C-Suite roundtable brings us perspective from every angle. Join these visionaries, as we discuss:

- The capital required to bridge the gap between supply and demand
- How much money remains to be made in shale, up and down the stream
- The future of energy infrastructure according to FERC
- Which regions will experience an energy surplus and which will suffer energy deficits
